ABSTRACT SUBMISSION

The primary focus and content of the submitted abstract must be novel. Submission of the abstract implies that the abstract will not have been published in a scientific or professional publication prior to the presentation at the 13th Dresden Symposium on Autoantibodies.

The abstract must be informative, including a statement of the study's specific objectives, methods, summary of the results and concluding statement. Abstracts must be submitted together with a registration form of the presenting author either by e-mail to karsten.conrad@tu-dresden.de or using the online abstract form at <http://www.gfid-ev.de/dsa.htm>

The abstract handling committee (i.e. the co-chairmen and members of the international advisory board) will notify the authors regarding abstract acceptance and the form of presentation. Authors of highly interesting abstracts will be invited to contribute a manuscript for publication in the book series "Autoantigens, Autoantibodies, Autoimmunity".

We are proud to announce the Dresden Prize on the study of autoantibodies, which will be awarded in 2017 for the 7th time. The prize of 1000 EUR is a young scientist award (up to age 35). The members of the prize committee will select the winner by submitted abstracts as well as short presentations during the meeting.

I fulfil the criteria for the prize award
